INTRODUCTION.

HE Indian Primer now reprinted is one of the works of the pious and worthy John Eliot, familiarly known as the apostle of the Indians of New England, whose labours may be regarded as the morning star of modern missionary enterprise. It is interesting as being a work of its distinguished author, of which no perfect copy is known to exist except the one preserved in the Library of the University of Edinburgh; and it is also valuable as bringing into notice an additional specimen of the now obsolete language of the aborigines of North America.

Although the story of Eliot's missionary labours has been often told, a short outline of his life, and a notice of his works, may not be inappropriate in this place.

John Eliot was born in the year 1604 at Nasing, a village near Waltham in Essex. He was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, where he took his Bachelor's Degree in 1623. While at the University of Cambridge, he displayed a partiality for philology, which no doubt had some influence in stimulating the labours his pious zeal prompted him to bestow on the language of the Indians. Mather informs us, that "he was a most acute grammarian, and understood very well the languages which God first wrote his Holy Bible in," with "a good insight into all the other liberal arts," and "a most eminent skill in theology." After leaving the University of Cambridge, he was engaged in teaching, and was for some time usher in a school at Little Baddow, near Chelmsford, under the Rev. Thos. Hooker. While in the family of Mr Hooker, who was a rigid Puritan, Eliot received serious impressions, and resolved to devote himself to the work of the Christian ministry. At this period the tyranny of the government of England in religious matters was so intolerable that numbers of people left their native land, and sought an asylum in the wilds of America in the hope of enjoying among savages that liberty of conscience which was denied them by their own countrymen. Eliot was one of those who resolved thus to emigrate, and reached that country on the 3d of November 1631, landing with about sixty persons at the harbour of Boston. He was received with much kindness in that town, and, as the pastor of its first church was absent in England, Eliot was appointed to officiate for him, which he continued to do with great ability and acceptance until his removal to Roxbury. In October 1632, Eliot was married to a lady to whom he was attached before he left England. This was a long and happy union; and although the name of the lady has not been transmitted, she is said to have been a woman of much benevolence and of exemplary piety. In November following, Eliot was established as pastor of the church at Roxbury, which office he held for more than fifty-seven years till his death in 1690.

The conversion of the Indians was a subject of the deepest interest to those who had left their friends and country chiefly for the sake of religion. The same feeling was also shared by many in England, and Dr Lake, the Bishop of Bath and Wells, had the object so much at heart as to declare that nothing but his old age hindered him from going to America and devoting himself to the work. The charter which had been granted to the colony of Massachusetts Bay in New England in 1628 declared that to “wynn and incite the natives of the country to the knowledge and obedience of the onlie true God and Saviour of mankind and the Christian faythe” was in the “royall intention and the adventurer’s free profession the principall ende of this Plantation.” To endeavour as far as in him lay to carry out the object of the charter was one, and not the least, of the motives which impelled Eliot, now settled in Roxbury, to devote himself to the work of Christianising the Indians of Massachusetts. Writing to a friend in England in 1659, he says, “that public engagement, together with pity to the poor Indians, and desire to make the name of Christ chief in these dark ends of the earth—and not the rewards of men—were the very first and chief movers, if I know what did first and chiefly move in my heart, when God was pleased to put upon me that work of preaching to them." When Eliot began his labours, there were about twenty tribes of Indians within the limits of the Plantation having the same manners, language, and religion. He often forsook the charms of civilised and cultivated society to reside with these natives, who were unacquainted with the rudiments of culture, and who often wanted the ordinary means of subsistence. With them Eliot would remain for days and weeks, instructing them in divine things and also showing them how to improve their condition on earth. He partook of their hard fare, and was exposed to the attacks of the beasts of the forests, and to the spears and arrows of the Indians, who were fiercer than wolves and more terrible in their howling. None of these things moved him ; like a brave soldier he fought the good fight of faith, bearing every suffering with cheerfulness and every pain with resignation.

Ignorance of the Indian language, however, had at first seemed an insuperable bar to mission work, and in order to be able to carry out his labours, Eliot was for a long time assiduously employed in overcoming this difficulty. He secured the aid of a young Indian of Long Island, who had been taken prisoner in the Pequot war of 1637, and put to service with a Dorchester planter. This native, while he understood his own language, had a fair knowledge of English, and had a clear pronunciation. With his assistance, Eliot translated the Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, and many texts of Scripture, and compiled both exhortations and prayers. The difficulties and disadvantages under which his studies were prosecuted may be easily imagined. It was necessary, first of all, to teach his teachers. That the Indian language had never been reduced to rules, and was still unwritten, was not the chief hindrance to a learner. As has been remarked, its general structure, all its distinctive features, its laws of synthesis, by which complex ideas could be compressed into single words, were unknown or but imperfectly understood. It had no recognisable affinity to any language of the Old World. To English-speaking scholars the Algonkin plan of thought was a confused maze; to English ears the vocabulary was a jargon of harsh sounds combined in words "long enough," Cotton Mather thought, "to tire the patience of any scholar in the world. One would think," he adds, "they had been growing ever since Babel, unto the dimensions to which they are now extended." *

After being engaged for two years in the process of learning, Eliot was able to preach to the Indians in their own language. In company with three others, he in October 1646 visited the Indians at a place called Watertown Mill, a few miles from Cambridge (U.S.). There he preached to them in the wigwam of Waubun, a wise and grave Indian, in their own language without an interpreter. The village was afterwards named Nonantum or Noonatomen, i.e., Rejoicing; and it is related that Waubun and his company "diligently attended to the blessed word there delivered" and "professed they understood all that which was taught them in their own tongue." In his interesting "History of New England," Daniel Neal gives an account of the proceedings on that occasion:—"After a short prayer, Mr Eliot rehearsed and explained the ten commandments, informing the natives at the same time of the dreadful curse of God that would fall upon all those that brake them. He then told them who Jesus Christ was, where He was now gone, and how He would one day come again to judge the world in flaming fire. He informed them likewise of the blessed state of all those who by faith believe in Christ, and know him savingly. He spake also of the creation and fall of man ; of the infinite greatness of God, the maker of all things ; of the joys of heaven and the torments of hell, persuading them to repentance and a good life. Having spent about an hour in discoursing upon these arguments, he desired to know whether they would ask him any questions about his sermon, upon which one stood up and asked how he might come to know Jesus Christ ? another inquired whether Englishmen were ever so ignorant of Jesus Christ as themselves ? a third whether Jesus Christ could understand prayers in the Indian language? Another proposed this question: How there could be an image of God since it was forbidden in the second commandment? Another, Whether if the father be naughty and the child good, God will be offended with that child, because in the second commandment it is said he visits the iniquities of the fathers upon the children? The last question that was asked at this meeting was, How all the world became full of people if they were all once drowned in the Flood? Mr Eliot and his friends gave plain and familiar answers to all these questions, and after a conference of about three hours returned home." *

In addition to his ministerial labours, Eliot taught them to improve their wigwams, and to fence their grounds with ditches and stone walls. The women also he taught the use of spinning-wheels, which he was at great pains to procure for them. The converts he made were called "praying Indians." The Indian chiefs, and powaws or conjurors, however, were greatly opposed to the gospel. The former were jealous of their authority, the latter of their gain. To manifest their malignity as far as possible, they banished from their society such of the people as were called praying Indians ; and in some instances it is said they even put them to death. Nothing but the dread of the English prevented them from murdering the whole of the converts, a circumstance which induced some to conceal their sentiments and others to fly to the colonists for protection.

* Vol. i. p. 223.

Notwithstanding these difficulties, however, Eliot sought by acts of kindness to win the confidence and affections of the savages. "The work of converting the Indians," he says, "is difficult not only in respect of the language but also on account of their poverty and barbarous course of life; there is not so much as meat or drink or lodging for them that go to preach among them, but we must carry all things with us, and somewhat to give unto them. I never go unto them empty, but carry somewhat to distribute among them; and when they come to my house I am not willing they should go away without some refreshment. Neither do I take any gratuity from them unrewarded; and indeed they do account that they have nothing worth the giving unto me; only once when I was up in the country a poor creature came to me as I was about to take horse, and shaking me by the hand, with the other thrust something into my hand. I looked what it was, and found it to be a pennyworth of wampum upon a straw's end. I, seeing so much hearty affection in so small a thing, kindly accepted it, only inviting him to my house that I might show my love to him."

The labours of Eliot for the conversion of the Indians were reported in England, and excited great attention. A society was instituted for the propagation of the Gospel in New England, with power to receive, manage, and dispose of money for that purpose. Among the leading members of this society, afterwards incorporated, was the Hon. Robert Boyle, well known for his scientific discoveries, who was devoted to its interests, and who was one of Eliot's constant co-respondents. Money was then collected and transmitted to America for the missionaries and teachers, and a salary of £50 was paid to Eliot in supplement of his moderate income of £60 as minister of Roxbury.

In 1643 the Corporation began to issue reports of the progress of their labours. The first was printed that year, and was entitled "New England's First-Fruits in respect . . of the Indians." The second was "The Day-Breaking if not the Sun-rising of the Gospel with the Indians in New England," and was printed in 1647. The third was "The Cleare Sunshine of the Gospel breaking forth upon the Indians in New England," by the Rev. Thomas Shepard of Cambridge, printed in 1648. In the second and third reports was given an interesting account of the missionary work of Eliot and others, but the fourth, which was printed in 1649, contained several of Eliot's letters. It is entitled "The Glorious Progress of the Gospel amongst the Indians in New England. Manifested by three letters under the hand of that famous instrument of the Lord, Mr John Eliot, and another from Mr Thomas Mayhew, jun., both preachers of the word as well to the English as Indians in New England, wherein the riches of God's grace in the effectual calling of many of them is cleared up; as also a manifestation of the hungering desires of many people in sundry parts of that country after the more full revelation of the gospel of Jesus Christ to the exceeding consolation of every Christian reader."

Through the labours of Eliot, the praying or converted Indians founded in 1651 a settlement on the banks of Charles River, about eighteen miles from Boston, called Natick, or "Place of hills." Thither the Nonantum Indians removed. This village consisted of three long streets, with a piece of ground for each family. A few of the houses were built in the English style, but most of them were after the Indian fashion, as they generally preferred their own mode of building as being warmer and cheaper. A large house was, however, erected in the English style, in which was a great hall used as a place of worship on the Sabbath and during the week days as a schoolhouse. The upper floor was a kind of store-room in which the Indians deposited their skins and other articles of value, and in one of the corners was an apartment for Eliot, with a bed for his use, known as "the prophet's chamber." Besides this building there was a large fort of a circular form, palisadoed with trees, and a small bridge over the river, the foundation of which was secured with stones.

In 1653, at the charge of the Corporation for the propagation of the gospel, Eliot published a Catechism for the use of the Indians. This was the first work issued in their language, but no copy of it is now known to exist. In the same year there was published by the Corporation in London a work called "Teares of Repentance; or a Further Progress of the Gospel among the Indians of New England," in which there was given "A brief relation of the proceedings of the Lord's work among the Indians in reference unto their Church-estate, by John Eliot." Two years afterwards the Corporation published at London another report by Eliot of the progress of his mission. It was entitled "A late and further manifestation of the progress of the gospel amongst the Indians in New England, declaring their constant love and zeal to the truth, &c., being, a narrative of the examinations of the Indians about their knowledge in religion by the elders of the Church, related by Mr John Eliot, 1655." These works, which form the seventh and eighth reports of the corporation, were due to the extreme strictness in the admission of persons to Church fellowship then prevalent in New England, which in the case of the Indians was rather increased than abated. They were made by Eliot to confess their sins, and give an account of their knowledge of the principles of religion and of their Christian experience, after which the ministers of the neighbouring churches assembled on a day appointed for the purpose, when the converts made similar declarations before them. Several of them were at length baptised, and in 1660 they were formed into a Christian church, and had the Lord's Supper administered to them.

In 1660 Eliot drew upon himself public censure by the publication at London of a work upon Government called "The Christian Commonwealth, or the Civil Policy of the Rising Kingdom of Jesus Christ." This book had been written by Eliot after the first tidings of the successes of the Puritans in England reached America. It had lain in manuscript for nine or ten years, and, by some enemy or ill-advised friend of the author, was published in the midst of the excitement consequent on the Restoration of Charles II. It was complained of as a sedition work, and the Governor and Council of the colony of Massachusetts declared it full of erroneous principles in relation to all established governments in the Christian world, and especially against the Government established in England. Eliot, however, stated that this work had been published without his knowledge or consent. He at the same time declared his readiness to subject himself for conscience sake to any form of civil polity which could be deduced from Scripture as being of God, and abjured everything in the book inconsistent with this declaration. This work was accordingly suppressed, and Eliot's retractation was accepted and posted in the public places of all the chief towns in the colony.

Having long resolved to make the translation of the Bible into the Indian language the great aim of his life, Eliot about this time completed his task. The Indians through his teaching had a knowledge of most of the important parts of the Scriptures, but he felt that it was desirable that they should have the whole Bible at their side as a perpetual instructor. This he had kept in view from the first ; at the same time he trusted that, in the providence of God, some way would ultimately be found to bring about the desired result. When the Corporation for the propagation of the gospel obtained funds, this seemed the most important object to which these could be destined. The New Testament was accordingly printed in the Indian language in 1661, soon after the restoration of Charles II. It happened that the printing of this work was completed while the Corporation were expecting the renewal of their charter. They thought that this was a favourable opportunity of showing their loyalty, and the Commissioners of the United Colonies prefixed a dedication to the King written in a tone calculated to win his favour. This first edition of the New Testament has two title pages, one in English and the other in Indian. The first is "The New Testament of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, translated into the Indian Language, and ordered to be printed by the Commissioners of the United Colonies in New-England at the charge, and with the consent of the Corporation in England for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Indians in New-England. Cambridg: Printed by Samuel Green and Marmaduke Johnson, MDCLXI." The other, "Wusku Wuttestamentum Nul-Lordumun Jesus Christ Nuppoquohwussuaeneumun." Twenty copies of this book were sent to England, each of which contained the dedication; one copy for the King, the rest for other distinguished persons. In the letter which the Commissioners sent to England along with the copies they request "that two of the special being very well bound up, the one may be presented to his Majesty in the first place, the other to the Lord Chancellor, and that five more may be presented to Dr Reynolds, Mr Carrill, Mr Baxter, and the two Vice-Chancellors of the Universities, who, they understand, have greatly encouraged the work." The others were to be disposed of as should be seen fit.

In the dedication to the King it was stated that the Old Testament was in the press, and the Commissioners craved the "royal favour and assistance for the perfecting thereof." The dedication concludes with the following sentence:—"Sir, The shines of Your Royal Favour upon these Undertakings, will make these tender Plants to flourish, notwithstanding any malevolent Aspect from those that bear evil will to this Sion, and render Your Majesty more Illustrious and Glorious to after generations." The Old Testament was at length, after being three years in preparation, published in 1663. Copies of the New Testament were bound with it, and thus was furnished a complete Bible in the Indian language. To it were added a Catechism and the Psalms of David in Indian verse, which last was a translation of the New England version of the Psalms prepared some years previously by Eliot and others. The Indians had been much pleased with singing, and to gratify and improve their taste these Psalms were added to the sacred books. The title of the Indian Bible is as follows:—“Mamusse Wunneetupanatamwe Up-Biblum God naneeswe Nukkone Testament kah wonk Wusku Testament—Ne quoshkinnumuk nashpe Wuttineumoh Christ noh asowesit, John Eliot. Cambridge: Printeop nashpe Samuel Green kah Marmaduke Johnson, 1663.” Literally translated, “The-whole

Holy his-Bible God, both Old Testament and also New Testament. This turned by the-servant-of Christ, who is-called John Eliot."

When the Indian Bible was completed, a copy in elegant binding was sent to Charles II., "such a work and fruit of a plantation," observes Baxter, "as was never before presented to a king." Another dedication to Charles was inserted in addition to that prefixed to the New Testament, and both the dedications of the Commissioners were inserted in the presentation copies sent to England, but in very few of those circulated in the Colonies. The additional dedication as prefixed to the whole Bible is consequently very rare. Indeed a Bible containing it is scarcely to be found. Mr Convers Francis, who has written the life of Eliot, mentions that the cost of preparing this first edition of the Indian Bible was about £437. It may be mentioned that such is the eagerness with which this Bible is now sought for as a literary curiosity that a single copy has recently been valued at upwards of two hundred guineas. According to Field, only twenty-three copies are known to have existence in America and about ten in Europe.

The second dedication prefixed to this Bible is very interesting. In it the Commissioners thank the King for renewing the charter of the Corporation and thus defeating the attacks of its enemies. They assure the King that though New England has not, like the Spanish colonies of South America, gold and silver with which to enrich the mother country, yet they rejoice to send to the land of their fathers the Bible in the language of the natives among whom the gospel had been planted and propagated, believing this to be "as much better than gold, as the souls of men are worth more than the whole world."

It is worthy of remark that this Indian version of the Scriptures, printed at Cambridge (U.S.), by Samuel Green and Marmaduke Johnson, was the first Bible issued in America. It was not till the middle of the next century that the Scriptures in the English language were printed in that country.

The first edition of the Indian Bible, of which about fifteen hundred copies were printed, sufficed for about twenty years. In 1680 another edition of the New Testament was published, and in 1685 the second edition of the Old Testament was issued. It was printed at Cambridge (U.S.) by Samuel Green. This was bound with the second impression of the New Testament, and the two parts taken together constitute the second edition of the whole Bible, although there was an interval of five years between them. Of this second edition the whole impression was 2000 copies. It was superintended by Eliot, who gave a part of his salary towards defraying the expense. He received for the purpose from the Corporation in England, through the Hon. Robert Boyle, about a thousand pounds. He obtained valuable assistance in revising it from the Rev. John Cotton of Plymouth (U.S.), who had also spent much of his time in obtaining a thorough knowledge of the Indian language. This second edition was dedicated "To the Hon. Robert Boyle, the Governor, and to the Company for the Propagation of the Gospel," and is, like the first edition, a book of great rarity.* That Eliot was overjoyed

* It may be interesting here to state that a fine copy of this second edition of the Indian Bible in the original binding, and in all probability presented by Eliot to the celebrated Quaker, Robert Barclay, was, on the dispersion of the family library of the Barclays of Ury a few years ago, secured for the Library of the University of Edinburgh. In 1682 Barclay received from Charles II. the nominal appointment of Governor of East Jersey in North America. Copies of both editions of this Bible are in the Glasgow University Library.

to see the completion of his great work may be easily conceived, as he was now far advanced in life. Writing to Mr Boyle, he says, "I desire to see it done before I die, and I am so deep in years that I cannot expect to live long: and sundry say if I do not procure it printed while I live, it is not within the prospect of human reason whether ever or where or how it may be accomplished." "He bore it on his heart to God," says Mr Francis, "in his devotions, and the anxious earnestness of his soul seemed to be fixed on this point. The prayer of the good man was answered. He lived to see a new impression of his Bible, and when he took the precious volume in his hands, we can easily imagine that with uplifted eyes he may have uttered the nunc dimittis of the aged Simeon."

Besides his translation of the Bible, Eliot published at Cambridge, U.S., in 1664, a translation of Baxter's "Call to the Uncon-verted," "Wehkomaonganoo asquam Peantogig kah asquam Quinnuppegig," &c. Of this a second edition was issued in 1688. In 1665 he published at Cambridge (U.S.), an abridged translation of Bishop Bayley's "Practice of Piety:"—"Manitowompae Pomantamoonk : sampwshanau Christianoh Uttoh woh an Pomantog Wussikkitteahonat God;" literally translated—"Godly living, Directs a-Christian how he may live to-please God." Of this work a second edition appeared in 1685. His well-known "Indian Grammar Begun," was written in the winter of 1664. In the preparation of this work he had the assistance of his sons, and it was printed at Cambridge (U.S.), in 1666. At the end of this book are these memorable words, "Prayers and pains through faith in Jesus Christ will do anything." In 1822 this grammar was reprinted with notes by Pickering and Du Ponceau in the ninth volume of the "Collections of the Massachusetts Historical Society." "The Indian Primer; or the way of training up our Indian Youth in the good knowledge of God. By J. E.," the work now re-issued, was printed at Cambridge (U.S.) in 1669. It comprises an exposition of the Lord's Prayer, and a translation of the Larger Catechism in Indian. On the fly-leaves at the beginning and end are printed the royal arms. Of this work, as already mentioned, the only complete copy is preserved in the Library of the University of Edinburgh. It bears an inscription on the fly leaf: "Gifted to the Library by Mr Jo. Kirton, Aprile 19, 1675." Mr J. Hammond Trumbull, in his valuable account of works printed in the Indian language (p. 42), describes a copy of this work without a title page as being in the library of the Massachusetts Historical Society. From various data he supposed it to be a copy of Eliot's Catechism, but from his bibliographical description, it seems another edition in a somewhat larger form of the volume now reprinted. In 1671 Eliot printed in English a little volume, entitled "Indian Dialogues for their Instruction in that Great Service of Christ in calling Home their Countrymen to the Knowledge of God and of Themselves." This was followed in 1672 by "The Logick Primer: Some Logical Notions to Initiate the Indians in the Knowledge of the Rule of Reason," &c. These two volumes, printed at Cambridge (U.S.), are now extremely rare. Of the former the only known copy exists in a private library in New York. There is a copy of "The Logick Primer" in the British Museum and another in the Bodleian.

In 1671 a small tract of eleven pages was published in London called "A Briefe Narrative of the Progress of the Gospel among the Indians in New England in the year 1670, given in by the Rev. Mr John Eliot, minister of the gospel there, in a letter by him directed to the Right Worshipful the Commissioners under his Majesty's Great Seal for the Propagation of the Gospel amongst the poor blind natives in those united Colonies." 'This was the eleventh and last of the publications of the Corporation after their charter was renewed by Charles II., but it is of extreme rarity.

In his old age the pen of Eliot was never idle. In 1678 he published "The Harmony of the Gospels in the Holy History of the Humiliation and Sufferings of Jesus Christ from his Incarnation to his Death and Burial." This work, which was printed at Boston, is a life of our Saviour, with many illustrative and practical remarks. The last of his publications was his translation into Indian of Shepard's "Sincere Convert,"

and in some places a-little amended by Grindal Rawson." This work had been nearly completed by Eliot in 1664, but it was revised by Grindal Rawson, and printed in 1689.

Worn out with the infirmities of age, and attacked by fever, Eliot's health now rapidly gave way. During his illness, when speaking about the evangelizing of the Indians, he said :—"There is a dark cloud upon the work of the gospel among them. The Lord revive and prosper that work, and grant that it may live when I am dead. It is a work I have been doing much and long about. But what was the word I spoke last? I recall that word, my doings. Alas! they have been poor, and small, and lean doings; and I will be the man who will throw the first stone at them all." One of the last expressions which were heard to fall from his lips were these emphatic words, "Welcome joy."

Eliot died at Roxbury on the 20th of May 1690 at the age of 86, and was acknowledged to have been a man whose simplicity of life and manners and evangelical sweetness of temper had won for him all hearts, whether in the settlements of the emigrants or in the smoky huts of the natives. So great was his charity that his salary was often distributed for the relief of his needy neighbours, so soon after the period at which he received it, that before another period arrived his own family were straitened for the comforts of life. The following anecdote illustrates the kindness of his disposition. One day the parish treasurer on paying the money for salary due put it into a handkerchief, and in order to prevent Mr Eliot from giving away his money before he got home, tied the ends of the handkerchief in as many hard knots as he could. The good man received the handkerchief and took leave of the treasurer. He immediately went to the house of a sick and necessitous family. On entering he gave them his blessing, and told them God had sent them some relief. The sufferers, with tears of gratitude, welcomed their pious benefactor, who with moistened eyes began to untie the knots in his handkerchief. After many efforts to get at his money, and impatient at the perplexity and delay, he gave the handkerchief and all the money to the mother of the family, saying with a trembling accent, "Here, my dear, take it ; I believe the Lord designs it all for you."

Eliot had a family of five sons and one daughter, but four of his sons predeceased their father. He destined his sons for the service of the missionary church. "I have often, in my prayers," he says, "dedicated all my sons unto the Lord to serve Him in this service, if He will please to accept them therein ; and better preferment I desire not for them than to serve the Lord in this travail." His eldest son, John, accordingly became a preacher to the Aborigines, but died in 1668 in the thirty-third year of his age. Joseph, his second son, was minister at Guilford in Connecticut, and survived his father. Samuel, Aaron, and Benjamin, the three younger sons, to his great grief, died early in life. But, though few of his family were alive to lament his death, Eliot's loss was much felt by the friends of religion. His labours were applauded in Europe and America ; and all who now contemplate his active services, his benevolent zeal, his prudence, his upright conduct, his charity, are still ready to declare his memory precious. It was remarked by one of his contemporaries, Cotton Mather, that the anagram of Eliot's name was Toile, and this most truly expresses the character of the Apostle to the Indians. His life may be recorded among the most eminent examples of industry which the world has furnished; and if ever there was a man who might justly be said to have died rich in good works, that man was John Eliot.

The translation of the Bible and the other works composed by Eliot for the use of the Indians are written in the Mohican dialect, which was spoken by the aborigines of New England. By Eliot and others it was called the Massachusetts language, but there is scarcely any person now living who can read or understand it.* Still, the works printed in it are valuable, as affording the means of information as to the structure and character of the unwritten dialects of barbarous nations.*

* Mr J. Hammond Trumbull, to whose labours in this field much credit is due, has made a study of this extinct language, and has found in it something more than the mere gratification of literary curiosity.

* As an illustration of the agglutinate nature of the language, the longest word used in the Bible is in St Mark's Gospel, i. 40, "Wutappesittukqussunnookwehtunkquoh—kneeling down to him." Another word longer still is "Kremmogkodonatootummootiteaonganunnonash"—in English, "our question."

THE INDIAN COVENANTING CONFESSION.

IN addition to the works of the well-known John Eliot — the ‘Apostle of the Indians of North America,’ — enumerated in the usual accounts of his life, a contemporary broad-sheet, containing a “Christian Covenanting Confession” drawn up for the Indians of New England, was published in his lifetime, and is worthy of attention from the interest of the subject at the present time.

This document, preserved in the Library of the University of Edinburgh, is, most probably, the only copy now in existence, and in all likelihood was prepared by Eliot himself, or by Grindal Rawson, who assisted him in his old age in revising his translation of the Bible and other publications in the Indian language.

Although this Confession is not dated, it would appear, from the following note in the handwriting of the Rev. W. Trail, Minister of Borthwick, presenting the copy to the University, that it was brought from New England in 1690, the year of Eliot's death :—

“This Indian Confession and Covenant of the Converts in New England was brought from thence in the year 1690, and afterwards gifted to the Bibliothek of the College of Edinburgh (my Alma Mater) by

W. TRAIL.”

From the following docquet on the original, the donation seems not to have been made till the year 1699 :—

“Indian Confession of Faith in New England, given be Mr Trail, Min., Borthwick, 1699.”

The donor, Mr William Trail, was the son of Mr Robert Trail, one of the ministers of Edinburgh. After studying at the University of that city, where he graduated in 1658, he was ordained to the Presbyterian congregation at Lifford in 1672. Joining, however, with four other ministers in the appointment of a fast, he was examined by Justices of the Peace at Raphoe, summoned to the Privy Council at Dublin, remitted to the assizes at Lifford, fined, and imprisoned from 11th August 1681 to 20th April 1682. After this he went to Maryland, and returned at the Revolution. He was admitted Minister of Borthwick, near Edinburgh, in 1690, where he remained till his death in 1714.

During his somewhat lengthened residence in America he, in all probability, had ample means of becoming aware of the labours of Eliot and his coadjutors.

In conclusion, it may be remarked that the Indian Primer of 1669—a work recently reprinted from the original in the Edinburgh University Library — contains the Apostles' Creed and the Larger and Shorter Catechisms, while the form of Confession given in the sheet now reprinted seems to have been subsequently prepared, thus forming an additional episode in the history of Eliot's labours. Besides being probably the first Confession of Faith printed in America, it may still be found suggestive for the purposes of those now engaged in prosecuting Missionary work in various parts of the world.
